Not illustrated. 1834 Excerpt: .the site is still denoted by the name; when the present mansion was built, some very old and very strong foundations were taken up which indubitably belonged to the ancient building. The kitchens at this place were built by the celebrated Archbishop Bowet, who, says Dr. Whitaker, in consequence consumed at Otley some portion of the fourscore tons of claret, with a proportionate quantity of other elements of hospitality, (the doctor should have added debauchery, ) which he is said to have annually expended. This bibacious prelate died 1423. Whether any of the Archbishops afterwards dispensed in this town the contents of their wine cellars and larders, does not appear; no doubt the hungry and thirsty inhabitants of Otley regretted their departure, and lamented that they were doomed to bear the trappings of archiepisoopal authority, while they were deprived of all participation in archiepiscopal luxury. Of ancient buildings in Otley the only intelligence which can be communicated is, that there was a hospital for lepers here in the reign of Edward II. but the building has long since disappeared. The most interesting circumstance connected with the history of Otley is, that the woollen manufacture was once established here; and it must have been conducted to some considerable extent, since it was fostered under the patronage of the Company of Merchant Adventurers. Of this company or society some account will be given in our Commercial History. It will be sufficient here to state, that the English Association...
