Collin C. Peterson (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding. Present: Representatives Collin C. Peterson, William H. Zeff, Jr., Christopher Shays, John McHugh, and Frank D. Lucas. Also present: Representative William Clinger. Staff present: Wendy Adler, staff director; Susan Mertes and Linda Thompson, professional staff members; June Saxton, clerk; and Judy Blanchard, minority deputy staff director. Mr. Peterson. The subcommittee will be in order. This morning we will examine how the Federal Aviation Administration could be costing the taxpayers and the aviation industry billions of dollars a year because of how it applies new technology such as what we are calling free flight. The topic of today s hearing, free flight, illustrates FAA s approach to new technology, an approach that is increasingly criticized. Air carriers claim they are losing about three and a half billion dollars annually from FAA s restrictions on free flight. Others put the price tag much higher, to almost $5.5 billion. Today s technologies open the door to huge improvements in aviation efficiency, capacity and safety. And these improvements could also reduce costs for industry and taxpayers, could expand air service to small communities and could boost the general economy. But FAA s delay in evaluating and placing new technology holds back progress and all the benefits that go with it. So when industry is ready to implement new technology, it is...
